Responsible Travel will Keep Travel Possible.

We've made great strides in suppressing spread of COVID-19 on our path back to a new "normal," but there's still more work to do. If you are traveling to New Mexico, please be mindful of the following guidelines:

- Fully vaccinated individuals are not required to wear a mask unless otherwise recommended by the latest official guidance from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention. Individuals who are not fully vaccinated must wear a mask or multilayer cloth face covering in public settings except when eating, drinking, or exercising outdoors alone. You can review New Mexico's mask requirements here.
- A new normal is coming soon. State officials project that 60 percent of eligible New Mexicans will be fully vaccinated by the end of June, allowing the state to graduate beyond many of capacity restrictions currently in place. Until then, the state is operating under a color-coded risk assessment framework that permits most businesses to operate with limited capacity. Most of the state currently operates under the least-restrictive guidelines, but that may be subject to change until then. You can review the state's color-coded framework here.
- Look before you book. Some businesses may have implemented additional safety guidelines for guests. We encourage you to review any additional guidelines from businesses before your visit and to respect additional requirements any business may decide to implement.
- Please be gracious and patient with businesses as they continue to ramp up staffing. We are all adjusting to a new normal and your courtesy will be much appreciated.
